New Zealand Post will have been happy to receive $130 million from Budget 2020, the funds to supposedly allow it to maintain service levels for the future. In addition it also received some $150 million from the Government's Covid Response and Recovery Fund. This is in addition to the $29 million they received in Covid wage subsidy.

There can be no doubt that postal services have been hugely impacted by the global pandemic. Certainly an already struggling New Zealand Post would have lost huge volumes of parcel post as a result of the lockdown with Associate Minister of State Owned Enterprises Shane Jones stating "We have now reached the point where it is no longer commercially viable for New Zealand Post to maintain current service levels and it needs Government support".

Service levels at NZ Post fall well below what would be expected of even an average company in the private sector – and that's before the impact of a global pandemic takes effect. This is a behemoth that is slow to learn, slow to react and drowning in red tape and bureaucracy with little efficiencies shown. As such the huge amount of extra funding to the tune of $280 million is likely to make little difference to service levels.

New Zealand Post's problems are far more complex than a simple lack of funding. The issues start right at the heart of the organisation with those attempting to make senior management and so called strategic decisions. As the old saying goes 'the fish rots from the head'.

Take for example my experience this weekend when opening a Post Office Box at my now local – Maungaturoto. I filled in the form, had my proof of address and my ID and off I went. The local operator, a nice guy, advised me that late last year, despite having all the NZ Post technology, 'over-night' and with no notice NZ Post told him he could no longer electronically process payments – including PO Box applications. The new rules were that he was to sign the form, hand it back to the customer who was then to take it to the nearest Post Shop to pay and then bring back the receipt to him at which time he would issue the key to the PO Box. With no other choice and lots of time due to it being a Saturday I jumped in the car and headed off to my closest Post Shop, Wellsford – a distance of 34km. Upon arrival the single server took 45 minutes to work through a queue of 4 people before it was my turn. Yep – 45 minutes, four people. And the requests were for a collection of a parcel (not yet arrived), a pin reset of a credit card and two vehicle registrations. Not difficult stuff by any stretch. Upon looking at my form the pleasant but very slow lady managed to take my money ($180 for 12 months rental) and hand me back the receipt. Back in the car I went, driving 34km to Maungaturoto where I handed in my receipt for $180.00 in return for the keys to PO Box 30. A round trip of just on two hours.

In what world is this efficient, cost effective and customer friendly business?

The efficiencies are not just evident in country towns. This week Newmarket Post Office was not processing courier deliveries to Post Office Boxes, instead choosing to have drivers who were already massively behind schedule deliver them to company physical addresses. Fine in theory but in practice this was adding another 4-6 days to the delivery time. Upon requesting for parcels to be held at the Newmarket Post Office, our very own David Holmes was advised that paperwork would need to be completed. This was duly done and emailed off as requested. Did the bureaucrats pass it on? Short answer, no.

And speaking of the Newmarket Post Office – the May edition of this very newsletter sat uncleared in the sorting box for days and days before even starting its journey out to our customers. No one at the branch seemed to have any idea when the overflowing mail box would be cleared.

Of course the issues go beyond just David and myself. Take Tony Sparks who owns The Hunny Shop at Garston in the South Island. He was in the stuff news recently as being at 'his wits end' with his dealings with NZ Post. Sparks transitioned his business on line due to the South Island floods and of course the tourism dry up due to covid. It was not just the excessive charges but also getting correct and timely information out of Post Shop staff and 'mid level' management that became a major issue. First, he was told his local Post Shop could not take parcels unless The Hunny Shop was registered with the Ministry for Primary Industries (MPI). Fair enough, he went through the registration process only to be told by Post Shop staff that all his customers had to be registered too. Bear in mind he's sending off jars of honey around New Zealand and overseas. That's Honey, not nuclear reactors! Frustrated Sparks put a call in to NZ Post and MPI in Wellington and was told there was no prohibition on sending small parcels of honey around New Zealand and overseas and customers did not need to be registered with MPI. After going to the press Sparks was promised that NZ Post would get back to him with answers and assistance on his pricing queries. At the time of writing, he's heard nothing, calling out NZ Post as having 'a rudderless management team'.

There can be little doubt that NZ Post is going around in circles, swimming in red tape and the often well intentioned staff can't keep up. It seems those in charge simply do not have the skill set to drive this business forward in a modern age. In short, they're not for the job.

With no shortage of stories or anecdotes outlining the poor service and ineffective business practices at NZ Post, perhaps it is time to say goodbye to the small minded, tunnel visioned bureaucrats and hello to some of the hugely talented modern, strategic and future focused thinkers who own and run successful businesses in the private sector.

Rather than the Government continuing to hand out vast sums of money to keep the dying beast known as NZ Post on life support they should seek out some private sector talent and have that talent bravely reimagine how a great postal service could look – I reckon just a tiny fraction of the $280 million the Government has just delivered to NZ Post would have been a pretty smart way to kick off this kind of modern rethink.
